DAVID JAYNE HILL

is among the foremost authorities upon international law now living. He has served the United States as Ambassador to Germany and Minister to Switzerland and The Netherlands, and was Assistant Secretary of State from 1898 to 1903. His writings include A History of European Diplomacy and Impressions of the Kaiser. The essay in this issue is the last chapter of a book by Dr. Hill, soon to be published, entitled Present Problems in Foreign Policy.

JOHN HAYS HAMMOND,

President of the National League of Republican Clubs, gained an international reputation as one of the four leaders in the reform movement in the Transvaal. Later he acted as Special Ambassador representing the President at the Coronation of George V. The present paper was read recently before the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

A. ANDREADES,

now visiting this country, is one of the most distinguished members of the Faculty of the University of Athens. He is the author of many volumes, and is a recognized authority on economics.

CHARLES JOHNSTON,

though now a citizen of the United States and attached to the Military Intelligence Division of the General Staff, was for many years in the Civil Service of Great Britain for India.

T. J. BAKER

is the nom de plume of a college professor, whose identity is withheld from our readers, but well known to us.
